

Atlantean Weather

A Mage Knight Mini Expansion

Concept

The day/night cycle in Mage Knight is a fantastic and thematic facet of the game. I always loved how the rolling of the sun or the coming of night really made you feel part of a living, breathing world. I wanted to add weather patterns to this to help accentuate the day/night cycle.

Cards

There are two sheets of cards:

1 x Day Card Set

1 x Night Card Set

Print two copies of each sheet, use the corresponding Day or Night Card Back. This will give you 18 cards in both the Day weather deck, and the Night weather deck. Feel free to use more Day or Night sheets, but each deck must be a minimum of 18 cards.

Rules

A player will be affected by an Atlantean Weather card rules whenever a weather card is drawn for the tile they are on, and until they leave the tiles affected by that weather card. Immediate effects of the card upon a player are resolved as soon as the card is drawn to determine the weather of the tile that player is on. Ongoing effects are active for as long as that Atlantean Weather card is in play.

In addition, if the player attacks or interacts with tokens on a different tile to the one they are on, the rules for the tile the player is on are used for both the player and the target of the action/attack.

Do not draw an Atlantean Weather card for the starting tile.

Variant 1 - Continental Weather

This variant of Atlantean Weather simulates the weather across large tracts of the Atlantean Empire. It requires less upkeep than other variants. Feel free to choose your own weather rows.

A - At the start of each round, draw one day/night weather card for each row.

B – Each card affects the tiles in the row it has been drawn for.

C – At the start of a new round, discard all in-play Atlantean Weather cards, and draw new cards from the alternate day or night deck.

Variant 2 - Regional Weather

This variant of Atlantean Weather simulates the weather across individual regions of the Atlantean Empire. Each tile will have individual weather effects rolling across them over the course of the game. This variant requires more upkeep.

A – At the start of each round, draw an Atlantean Weather card for the tile each player is on, and each tile connected to theirs. Unless the card is 'Clear Skies', or 'Rising Moon' then place the corresponding weather token in that tile.

B – Place each unique Atlantean Weather card on the Day (or Night) Weather Track. The Weather Tracks are rules reminders for weather tokens on the tiles.

For Example:

