

Ladyhawke by Eliadann

Her name is Isabeau D'Anjou. Her father was the count D'Anjou, an ill-tempered fellow. He found his death slaying Saracens in Antioch. She came to live, with her cousin I think it was, in Aquila. I shall never forget the first time I saw her. Even His Grace, the Bishop, could not think of anything else. His passion was a sort of madness. But Isabeau sensed his wickedness, and she shrank from him. She sent back all his letters and left his poems unread. Her heart was already lost, you see, to the captain of the guard. Etienne Navarre! The Bishop knew nothing about their love.

Until they were betrayed. They shared the same confessor, a weak, foolish priest. On one day, on a drunken confession to his superior, he committed a mortal sin. He revealed their secret vows to the Bishop. The old fool did not realize what he had done at first, or the terrible revenge the Bishop would exact. His Grace seemed to go mad, he lost both his sanctity and his reason. He swore, that if he could not have her, no man would. So, Navarre and Isabeau fled from Aquila. The Bishop followed, ever more ardent, ever more persistent than a hound. An evil man, a powerful man, hated and feared; rejected even by Rome itself. He called upon the powers of darkness for the means to damn the lovers. In his fury and frustration, he struck a dreadful bargain with the Evil One. The dark powers of hell spat up a terrible curse, and you have seen it working. By day, Isabeau is the beautiful bird you brought to me. And by night, the howl of the wolf that we hear is the cry of Navarre. Poor dumb creatures, with no memory of the half-life of their human existence never touching in the flesh. Only the anguish of a split second at sunrise and sunset, when they can almost touch, but not. Always together, eternally apart. As long as the sun rises and sets, as long as there is day and night and for as long as they both shall live.

Set up

Players: 2 - One male and one female Mage Knight must be selected. The male Mage Knight will be Navarre, while the female Mage Knight will be Isabeau. Throughout the scenario description, some rules will refer to Navarre or Isabeau, meaning male or female mage knight.

Type: Cooperative

Game length: 2 days, 2 nights, and an eclipse round (see Special rules)

Purpose: Kill the bishop of Aquila and break the curse

Map shape: Diamond

Country Tiles: 6 – Select two map tiles containing a monastery, and the remaining with none.

City Tiles: 1 - Will be the city of Aquila. If blue city map tile, the Monastery is burnt, treat it as an empty space, with its normal terrain cost to enter). City of Aquila is level 11. It is hostile and cannot be entered nor its garrison revealed until the last round of the game, during the eclipse.

Core Tiles: 2

No portal map tile is used in this scenario.

Starting map tile is the one containing the city

Full map is placed at the beginning of the scenario, according to settings below:

- 1) Map shape is configured by creating a diamond with the city in its center
- 2) Core non city tiles will be north and south off the city
- 3) There will be two countryside tiles east of the city, and two countryside tiles west of the city, same way
- 4) The last two countryside tiles in the west and east ends of the map, completing the diamond shape
- 5) All map tiles are placed face down at the beginning of the game, save for the core city tile
- 6) Starting position for your mage knight is any safe space adjacent to the city of Aquila
- 7) No tile can be explored outside the map shape

Dummy player: A special dummy player is used in this scenario (see Special rule “Companion”)

Tactics: You select any tactic for the day (in a day round) or for the night (in a night round) at the beginning of it, but once the round is over, remove it from the game (each tactic can only be used once). During the eclipse, both night and day tactics can be used (see special rule “Eclipse” for details). After selecting your tactic card, draw a random tactic to dummy player to determine order of play.

Cards and skills: Remove the four competitive spells (numbered 17-20) from the spell deck, and both interactive skills (the ones with darker background on the skill description card) and cooperative skills from the player’s skill deck

Special Rules Part 1

The curse: because of the curse thrown by the bishop, during day rounds only the male mage knight (Navarre) will play, while the female mage knight (Isabeau) will do so only during night rounds. The non active character (Navarre on night rounds and Isabeau during the day) will act as a special dummy player (see special rule "Companion"). In the round of the eclipse (fifth and last), both Navarre and Isabeau can walk in human form and play together. To handle transition between night and day, follow the steps below (beginning of a night round as an example):

- Remove the figure from Navarre from the map, and place the figure of Isabeau on the same space
- Take all crystals from Navarre's inventory to Isabeau's inventory
- Take all units from Navarre's command tokens to Isabeau's command tokens. Units that cannot be reallocated are lost and removed from the game. Units already wounded remain wounded
- Take all non-basic cards from Navarre's deed deck (AA's, Spells, Artifacts) and add them to Isabeau's deed deck
- Wounds are NOT transferred from one deck to the other
- These transitions do not alter fame, reputation, and skills for both Navarre and Isabeau

Companion: During the day, Isabeau will be a hawk traveling with Navarre, while during the night it will be Navarre who turns into a black wolf that travels with Isabeau. As a companion, your mage knight cannot play, but will act as a dummy player with the mechanics below:

- Get a random tactic card to determine order of play, after the active player has selected one
- At the beginning of the round, you will draw 5 cards from your deck to your hand
- Whenever the active player generates move, attack, block, or influence, you can play cards from your hand to contribute to these move, attack, block or influence actions (including cards played sideways). However, when doing this you can never go below three cards in hand (so upon each trigger it's going to be playing two, one or no cards at all). None of these cards can be powered with mana to get their stronger effect
- At the end of your turn, you must discard three cards from your hand (you can discard wounds this way), and afterwards draw cards until you have five cards in hand or your deed deck is empty
- If you do not have any cards in your deed deck at the beginning of your turn, you must declare End of Round

Note 1: cards played as a dummy player can only generate move, influence, attack or block to contribute an action started by the active player. All other effects or side effects are ignored

Additionally, the active player will take the companion character's card to his/her play area for the effects below:

The Hawk (Navarre will get this companion)

You can explore at farther distances. Move points you need to pay to explore a new map tile are the distance between you and the map tile, being move 1 when you are adjacent.

The Wolf (Isabeau will get this companion)

Once per turn, when engaging in combat, you can ignore one defensive ability or resistance printed on an enemy token

A beautiful woman with alabaster skin and the eyes of a dove. She travels by night, only by night. Her sun is the moon. And her name is... Isabeau. Find her and you find the wolf. The wolf I want. The wolf who... loves her. - His Grace, the Bishop of Aquila

Special Rules Part 2

Imperious: Navarre and Isabeau must leave the city of Aquila after being betrayed to the bishop by their confessor, a priest named Imperious. Later on, Imperious, ashamed of his behaviour, discovers a way to break the curse in the upcoming eclipse and will try to convince both Navarre and Isabeau to trust him again. To represent this, in any monastery, you can pay influence 7 during interaction to gain an extra eclipse turn (see special rule "Eclipse"). A maximum of three turns can be gained, and these are represented by a gold crystal to your inventory. If Navarre has gained one extra eclipse turn, he cannot gain a second one unless Isabeau has gained one too (and vicerversa)

Note 1: these extra eclipse turns are to be played by both Navarre and Isabeau during the last round, regardless of who gained them

Ah, away with you! This is the house of God, not a brothel! - Imperious the priest

The eclipse: In the fifth and last round, an eclipse happens. Follow the mechanics below and apply some specific rules:

- Place Navarre's figure on the map, adjacent to Isabeau's in a safe space
- Distribute crystals on Isabeau's inventory as you like between both
- Distribute units in Isabeau's command tokens as you like between both
- Distribute all non basic cards (AAs, spells and artifacts) found in Isabeau's deed deck as you like between both
- Wounds from Isabeau's deed deck remain there, as do any wounds found in Navarre's deed deck

As per the rules for the eclipse:

- There is no dummy player during the eclipse. The eclipse round lasts only one turn, plus any extra eclipse turns gained by Navarre and Isabeau
- Both day and night tactics can be used during the eclipse. Player with least fame chooses first. In case that both tactic cards show same number, randomize order of play.
- Both gold and black mana can be used during the eclipse, so no mana is depleted in the source. Should you start your turn in a magical glade, you can pick gold or black mana to get a token
- Move cost of deserts and forests during the eclipse is 4

Three days hence, the Bishop will hear confession of the clergy in the cathedral in Aquila. All you must do is confront him, both of you as man and woman in the flesh. And the curse will be confounded, broken. And both of you will be free. - Impossible (Navarre) -. As long as there is night and day. But three days hence in Aquila, there will be a day without a night and a night without a day. - Imperious the priest

Special Rules Part 3

Aquila: the city of Aquila can only be assaulted cooperatively, with both Navarre and Isabeau being adjacent to it at the beginning of a turn during the eclipse. The city is level 11, and next to its garrison you must also face the bishop. However, upon assaulting the city of Aquila, you may split the enemies not only between Navarre and Isabeau, but also in turns, providing you have more than one eclipse turns. Follow strictly rules for cooperative assault, and treat these eclipse turns within Aquila as consecutive assaults to the city. Take into account that bishop cannot be engaged unless you have already defeated all units in the city garrison, or they have already been engaged in the same turn. Example:

If you assault it with two eclipse turns left and Navarre moves first, you could:

- In first turn, assign two enemy tokens to Navarre and two enemy tokens to Isabeau. In second turn, assign one enemy token to Navarre and bishop to Isabeau (and not otherwise, because Navarre moves first and could not face the bishop with one enemy not engaged;

OR

- In first turn, assign four enemy tokens to Isabeau, and one enemy token to Navarre. In second turn, both Navarre and Isabeau fight the bishop

Any combination is valid as long as you respect Bishop engagement rules. The longer the eclipse, the better your chances to live through the city garrison, defeat the bishop and break the curse. Apply standard mechanics for end of turn while within the city, such as discarding and drawing cards, reactivating once per turn skills, level up and so on.

Note 1: it might be that the Bishop is killed with part of the garrison still alive, if these have been engaged to unlock the bishop, but just blocked or prevented from attacking

The Bishop	Armor	Attack	Fame
Value	3	3	9
Abilities	Arcane immunity	Cold/Fire
	Fortified	Petrification
	Ice resistance	Assasination
	Fire resistace

The Bishop can be fought cooperatively.

Note 1: The Bishop is not boosted by the color of the city feature, as the garrison is (brutal for red, armor for white, etc..). He does gain fortification from being behind the city walls, though.

Someone who has seen the dungeons of Aquila, and lived to tell the tale - Philippe Gaston

Scenario End

This scenario ends when the Bishop is defeated, Navarre or Isabeau are knocked out within Aquila, or the eclipse is over

Scoring

If Navarre or Isabeau are knocked out within the walls of Aquila, or if the eclipse is over, the scenario ends immediately and you lose. If you kill His Grace, the Bishop of Aquila, you win.

In addition to count your individual score as per normal conquest standards, you can also measure the depth of your victory as a team, should you have won, by considering the following events at the moment the Bishop is dead:

- Navarre does not have any wounds in hand
- Isabeau does not have any wounds in hand
- The whole garrison of Aquila has been eliminated
- You have eclipse turns unspent

Now, see the degree of your victory:

- Pyrrhic victory (none of the events above)
- Unexpected victory (one event)
- Great victory (two events)
- Complete victory (three events)
- Epic victory (four events)
